LISA COSTA:

My time volunteering with the Warrior Reunion Foundation with the hike was such a rewarding experience, to have a firsthand account to witness and to observe and to listen and learn from these veterans' experiences. Not just their experiences fighting in wars, but just what they have been going through since that time. It's so different than reading it on an article or reading it somewhere else. But to be in person, serving lunch with them and physically active with them is huge.

STACY LOFTUS:

My experience on Saturday, volunteering to really just join and participate in a reunion for Marines that fought in Ramada, Iraq. There were some Gold Star families there. They did a service, you know, where they were honoring the soldiers that they lost that were friends of theirs, and they told some really personal stories. And so it was very, very moving. We talked most of the time, and I talked to families, I talked to Marines. It was really special and I'm so glad I did it.

LISA COSTA:

Just the fact that GT contributes to this is so profound. And being there, seeing exactly what our support does is this huge.
